

Daniel &
Sara

Dear Birth Mother,

Thank you for taking the time to learn about us. We know this is going to be the most precious gift someone can ever give us and we will forever be in that person's debt. Without you, we would not have the chance to become a family and thank you every day for your decision.

We have a home full of laughter, love, and family and cannot wait to complete our family with another child to share this with. We know how important it is to have you in this child's life and will work with you to make sure this openness continues throughout the child's life.

We know this is not an easy decision, nor one you are making lightly, and we wish you all the best.

Music has always been a big part of both of our lives, and it's actually what brought us together as a couple. In college, Daniel was in the marching band, and Sara was a music major.

We got married in August of 2013 in the lobby of the same performing arts center where we met years ago in college.

SARA

I have been called a modern day “Renaissance” woman because of my wide array of interests and talents. First, I love music. I play the flute in a Community Band .
I am a 4th grade teacher who loves science as well as the arts.

DANIEL

My idea of fun can vary quite wildly. I'm a big fan of games of almost all kinds. I own a large (and growing) collection of board games. I look forward to being able to have regular Family Game nights and teaching our children how to play all of these board games. I'm also a big fan of sports. I follow most of our local sports teams and try to get to at least a few games every season. I enjoy playing soccer, and I also run pretty consistently. I can't wait to share all the fun we have with our children!

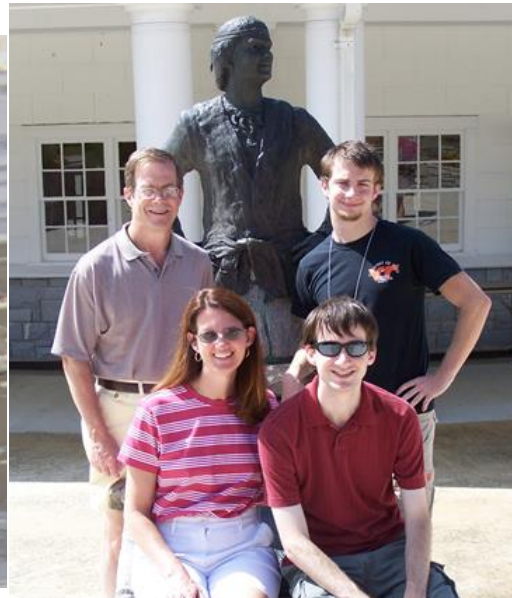

PAUL

PAUL burst into our hearts through adoption in 2018. He is a happy and friendly boy who loves fire trucks, trains, and running around outside. He also loves reading with us. Some of his favorite books are How I was Adopted and The Little Engine that Could. Paul started school this year and loves his teachers and friends. He is fascinated by his classmates' younger siblings and can't wait to be a big brother to "help when the baby cries".

As an interfaith couple, we come from two very different families, but both have given us a loving, supportive community to grow up in. Dan's parents have really enjoyed being grandparents and have decided that the grandchildren will spend at least one full week a year with them in the summer. Since Sara's parents live close, we typically have dinner at their house about once a week. Our best friend, who is more like a sister, lives just a few blocks away. She's proven to be an excellent "aunt" and is looking forward to adding another child for their outings.

Our Home

We live in a single-family home, just a few blocks from the capitol We love living in the city because there is always so much to do!

Once the weekend comes, we hardly ever get in the car. Instead, we prefer to walk or take the Metro as much as possible. There are several parks nearby that we walk to frequently with Paul.

Our street is a fantastic place to live. There are lots of families here with children ranging from newborn to teenagers. Everyone is incredibly friendly and we look forward to a time when we can arrange playdates between their children and ours.

We are so excited to adopt again and cannot wait to open our hearts to another precious child.

With love,

Daniel,
Sara & Paul
